A DAY ON ITHAKA... A LIFETIME OF MEMORIES...

It took Odysseus 10 years to reach Ithaka after the fall of Troy, and even when he did finally make it he still had to kill off a number of uninvited guests! Three thousand years later, the island’s just a few hours away and weapons are most definitely not required!

So, how does the Ithaka of today compare with its legendary past? Homer described the island as “rocky and unfit for horses”, which may have been true in the centuries before the Venetians arrived but is less so nowadays with its mixture of natural oak and pine forest, cultivated olive groves and vineyards. From the sea, Ithaka appears as two mountains connected by a narrow ridge and the sharp peak known as Aetos or The Eagle. It is an island of sheltered bays and pebble coves enclosed by steep headlands, doubleless in more temperate times a fortress standing guard over the Inner Ionian and the seaways into the Gulf of Corinth and the Peloponnesian Peninsula, but now much more a haven for those seeking a peaceful holiday away from mass tourism in delightful surroundings.

Perhaps Homer couldn’t find a horse to allow him to explore Odysseus’s kingdom and, given the mountainous nature of the terrain, might have baulked at any expedition on foot, so may not have ever visited the various natural features and ancient ruins that have been given names associated with his epic saga.

Nowadays, with a comfortable horseless carriage, it is possible to explore the ruins of the so-called School of Homer situated near the village of Stavrissi in the North or the excavations at Alaliomimes beneath the slopes of Mt Aetos. The more adventurous can scramble up the steep hillside above the excavations to see the massive blocks of the extraordinary Cyclopian walls, so named because only a giant’s strength could possibly have placed them! Vast walls, hidden caves, crags shaped like ravens’ wings carved in stone, olive orchards, all bearing names associated with The Odyssey abound. most now easily reached by well-maintained footpaths, to say nothing of the many artefacts from Mycenaean times that are on display in the island’s museums.

21st Century Ithaka has lost none of its mystique despite the arguments that rage in academic and archaeological circles about the true location for Odysseus’s Palace, or even about whether Homer himself actually existed. From the moment one first sets foot on the island none of these seem to matter. For a start there is the excitement of arriving by sea. Air travel might allow us to cross continents and oceans swiftly but there is something special about reaching an island by sea. A modern passenger ferry may be a far cry from an ancient Greek trireme but the waves and the mountainous outline of this small Ionian island are timeless in their appeal.

It is this tradition of sailing the oceans of the world that gives Ithaka its cosmopolitan atmosphere without in any way losing its own unique identity. Visitors here are welcomed into the everyday life of the island, whether through the many religious festivals that are held in every village throughout the summer or because there is a lack of any resort development. You will find children of many different nationalities playing together in the plateias of whilst their parents enjoy the warm evenings in the many tavernas.

Naturally some choose to come to Ithaka for the peace of the many small coves, the shaded tranquillity of ancient olive trees beside tiny hillside chapels, with their faded frescoes but always where a candle burns. Others will enjoy the challenge of following newly restored ancient trails up into the mountains where the golden eagles fly or down through forests of twisted oaks and statuesque cypresses. Or they will take to the sea in boats and explore the craggy coastline or swim in waters so clear that all the vibrant colours of the underwater world seem close enough to touch.

It is here that perhaps the true and ageless Ithaka can be experienced. Few who have spent some time on this island do not come away with a sense that the spirit of the place remains within them as it did for the great Greek poet C P Cavafy whose wonderful poem Ithaka, includes the following lines:

“And if you find her poor, Ithaka won’t have fooled you. Wise as you will have become, so full of experience, you’ll have understood by then what these Ithakas mean.”

VISITING ITHAKA

Visiting Ithaka with Ionian is easy, fly direct from London Gatwick, Birmingham or Manchester to Kefalonia, transfer to Fiskardo then take our own charter boat to Polls Bay on Ithaka and if a hire car is included in your package its picked up here with instructions to drive to your accommodation, if no car is included your Taxi or Mini bus transfer will be waiting to take you to your chosen property.

7 nights on Ithaka start from £383pp at the Elein Apartments or £455pp in Villa Rhodia (above).

For more information on our Ithaka collection of properties, visit our website www.ionianislandholidays.com or call our knowledgeable team on 020 8459 0777.
When we think of a Greek diet the first thing that comes to mind is a Mediterranean diet which is high in vegetables and fruits, and includes fish and poultry, but it’s not just about that! Greeks base their cuisine on seasonal vegetables, fruits, grains, legumes, herbs, spices, and olive oil – a perfect diet for vegetarians and meat lovers alike.

There are plenty of vegetarian meals available in Greece due to the season. For example, you can choose from a variety of pulses like lentils, chickpeas, and beans. These are rich in proteins, iron, and magnesium, and they’re also healthy carbs. They’re a great source of energy for those who exercise a lot.

Dips are a must in particular when visiting a taverna. They can be made from a variety of ingredients such as yogurt, cheese, and herbs. One of the most popular is Tzatziki, made with yogurt, cucumber, feta cheese, garlic, and olive oil. It’s a great way to add flavor to your meals.

Another popular dish is Skordalia, a garlic dip made with pureed potatoes. It’s a great way to add flavor to your meals, especially when served with vegetables.

If you’re looking for a hearty meal, you can try Ladera, a lentil soup cooked in onion, carrot, garlic, and sprinkled with olive oil. It’s a great way to start your meal and it’s also a great source of protein.

For those who enjoy a sweet treat, you can try baklava, a spiral of filo pastry filled with feta cheese and drizzled with honey. It’s a great way to end your meal on a sweet note.

Syrian refugees: will your holiday be affected?

We have been receiving calls from our regular loyal clients, as well as new potential ones, asking if their planned summer holiday to Greece but are concerned about the situation on certain Greek islands with the influx of refugees. Without doubt, the plight of these migrants who are fleeing war in Syria to Turkey is a distressing one. Images being relayed around the world of this humanitarian crisis are indeed awful and I feel so sorry for those who must continue to endure. A resolution must be found immediately to avoid any further tragedies. In the meantime, questions are being asked about the situation in Greece and her islands and if holidays are being affected by the current situation? As tragic as the refugee crisis is, we can answer a flat NO - your holiday will not be affected in any way as the destinations we feature are the Ionian Islands and the Sporades Islands which are hundreds of kilometres from the Turkish border. In fact, it is confined to a handful of islands in the North East Aegean Sea. Lefkada and Samos, as well as the Dodecanese Island of Kos. These islands all are within easy reach of the Aegean border and the routes used by the migrants to get to central and northern Europe. Greek tourism has been and continues to be resilient to the short crossing. Since the arrival of refugees began the Greek government have opened reception centres in order to house and process them offering food and shelter during their short stay on these islands. As ever the Greek people have been kind, generous but most of all welcoming to all, and no matter how difficult the situation is, Greece’s is a European wide issue. People that are arriving on these islands and are leaving as soon as their travel documents are processed are being offered food and shelter in their own countries and are being given the opportunity to make a new start in their lives. Greece is a special place for us, and the joy it gave my dad will be remembered ever after. Meganisi is part of our lives and will remain a special place for us, and for my mum she knew she would be among family who run the hotel, who have always provided a warm welcome to all of our guests, both local and other holiday-makers, and happy to share their art work with us. Send us your paintings via this link and we will send you details on your chosen island charity contact us at info@ionianislandholidays.com and we will write a post about the competition and the story of how you came across your story, or it may be a postcard, or a painting you have bought that you would like to donate, or a painting you designed yourself while in Greece. We will be happy to consider your story or your painting!

Are you fed up with In, Out, referendum already?

Here is an article by Chris Haslam, about the Brexit, as it was on Sunday Times dated 14th February 2016:

Will there be trouble in paradise?

“Given Greece’s recent deluge of problems, what are the prospects for a trouble-free summer holiday there? For the answer, you need to look both backwards and forwards, writes Chris Haslam.

This time last year, it wasn’t looking like a good bet. Debt default and a Grexit loomed, promising a season of drachmas and disruption for travellers as well as locals. Islands would run out of food, hotels would be seized by banks and cashpoints would be empty.

The financial collapse never came, but a different tragedy struck. The Dodecanese and Aegean islands became the threshold of Europe for Syria’s refugees.

Yet despite the relentless publicity, Greek tourism throve, with resorts largely unaffected and visitor numbers up on the previous year. And the signs are that this summer will follow the same pattern. The financial crisis hasn’t gone away, but there are clear signs that last year’s Caribean-type rush is about to be repeated. And while the refugee crisis is a tragedy, it affects only a handful of islands: Lesbos, Chios, Samos, Leros, Agathonisi, Kalymnos and Kos.

At present, though, the hazy geography of many travellers means there’s still loads of availability and great value in most of Greece. This may change soon, and terror will play a part. Millions of British and northern European tourists are shunning Egypt, Tunisia and Turkey, and have looked instead to the South of France, Portugal and Italy. Result: many resorts in these countries are booked out. By Easter, those who would have booked an all-inclusive in Turkey and have failed to find an alternative to bribery will consider Greece, and specifically resort islands such as Corfu, Crete and Rhodes.

So, this is not the year to be putting together a DIY holiday in Greece. Overbooking is likely on the increase, as well as in hotels, so buy a protected package from a bonded tour operator who will look after you if anything goes wrong, and look at smaller, harder-to-reach islands. Book your flights now, please, and smile. This is Greece, and the essentials remain: the same: the sun will shine, the sea will make you smile, the landscape will astound you. Greece holiday vouchers with runners up prizes too.

A painting competition

We know that many of our clients are artistic and portray the landscape and watercolours with them on their vacation in Greece, so we are holding a watercolour competition so that you can share your art with us. Send us your paintings no bigger than A3 size (297mm x 420mm). Deadline for entries is 30 November 2016. The competition is open to all our regular loyal clients, as well as new potential ones, asking if their planned summer holiday to Greece but are concerned about the situation on certain Greek islands with the influx of refugees. Without doubt, the plight of these migrants who are fleeing war in Syria to Turkey is a distressing one. Greek animal welfare

Regular guests of Ionian will be aware how passionate we are about our Greek animal’s welfare and of our commitment to their welfare. In 2014 we asked our guests to help us contribute to the Neutering of Cats on the Islands, paying for the operation of the local cat clinic there. We have received this far £6,766.80 for the spaying and neutering of cats on the islands. The total collection amounted to 6,658 over the various islands and this contributed to the neutering of cats on the islands, paying for the operation of the local cat clinic there.

How your simple gestures can make a difference - We were approached in 2015 by the Animal Welfare Trust fund who asked for not donation but instead if we would post a competition on our Facebook page whereby our fans could click on a link and nominate them in a competition to win up to £8,000 as a prize to worthy charities - we posted this on our Facebook page and at the close of the competition our friends clicked to nominate GAWP! And they came second as a result of these likes received £6,000 to assist Greek Animal Welfare all over Greece! Your simple click made a difference to the dysa in Greece! Once again thank you! We are pleased to announce that we have decided to hold a competition this year again please look at the Facebook page and look at the story of the competition.
